Roderick Cox, conductor

Roderick Cox, now in his second full season as the Minnesota Orchestra’s associate conductor after one year as assistant conductor, won critical and audience praise for his debut subscription performances with the Orchestra this past January. He regularly conducts Young People’s Concerts, family programs, outdoor community concerts and special performances such as this month’s “Send Me Hope” concert and a December 2016 “Spirit of the Season” concert at Shiloh Temple International Ministries in north Minneapolis. A native of Macon, Georgia, he served as assistant conductor of the Alabama Symphony Orchestra and music director of the Alabama Symphony Youth Orchestra. His recent honors include winning a Solti Foundation Career Assistance Award and being selected by the League of American Orchestras for the prestigious Bruno Walter National Conducting Preview. In August 2017 he debuted with the Johannesburg Philharmonic in South Africa. More: minnesotaorchestra.org, roderickcox.com.

Alessio Bax, piano

Alessio Bax debuted with the Orchestra in July 2015, when he performed in two Sommerfest concerts under Andrew Litton’s direction. A First Prize winner at the Leeds International Piano Competition—and the recipient of an Avery Fisher Career Grant and Lincoln Center’s Martin E. Segal Award—he has appeared as soloist with more than 100 orchestras, including the London and Royal philharmonic orchestras, the Dallas, Houston and Cincinnati symphonies, Japan’s NHK Symphony, St. Petersburg Philharmonic and City of Birmingham Symphony Orchestra. In 2017 he was appointed artistic director of Italy’s Incontri in Terra di Siena Festival for a three-year term. His discography includes works by Bach, Beethoven, Brahms, Mozart, Rachmaninoff and Stravinsky, as well as a Russian album and a lullaby collection, Lullabies for Mila, which is dedicated to his daughter Mila. William Schimmel, accordion

William Schimmel is a virtuoso accordionist, author, philosopher and composer. He is one of the principal architects in the tango revival in America, the resurgence of the accordion and the philosophy of Musical Reality. Regarded as the world’s greatest accordionist by National Public Radio, he has performed with virtually every major symphony orchestra in America and the Kirov, as well as nearly every chamber music group in New York. He has performed with pop stars ranging from Sting to Tom Waits, and can be heard on numerous film soundtracks. He is a prolific composer whose output ranges from concert music to Broadway and off-Broadway. Dr. Schimmel received degrees from the Neupauer Conservatory of Music and the Juilliard School, and has taught at numerous prestigious institutions. He now heads the Neupauer Conservatory Order of the Shield program. More: billschimmel.com.

Argento: Valentino Dances

Extracted from the opera The Dream of Valentino, Argento’s suite of dances for orchestra is enriched by the addition of the accordion, whose distinctive sound is essential to the tango.

Grieg: Piano Concerto

This virtuosic keyboard showcase, written when its composer was only 25, reveals its heritage in evocations of traditional Norwegian song and dance, and contains a wealth of themes and dramatic gestures.

Rachmaninoff: Symphonic Dances

Rachmaninoff’s final composition is full of rhythmic energy and colorful orchestration. The alto saxophone makes a rare orchestral appearance in this three-movement work, which closes with a breathtaking setting of the Dies Irae.
School of Music, where he received his Ph.D. He used Fulbright and Guggenheim Fellowships to study in Italy with Luigi Dallapiccola. His early one-act opera buffa based on Chekhov, The Boor (1957), proved to be a remarkable first-published opera, soon mounted on stages all over the U.S. and Europe. Since then, Argento has delivered more than a dozen operas, including The Voyage of Edgar Allan Poe; the Dickens-based Miss Havisham’s Fire, commissioned and premiered by the New York City Opera; and The Aspern Papers, drawn from Henry James and telecast nationally by PBS following its 1988 Dallas premiere, spurring productions in Germany and Sweden.

evoking the flamboyant ‘20s

Set in the silent film era of Hollywood, but also exploring the Italian immigrant experience, The Dream of Valentino received its premiere in 1994 by Washington’s National Opera, conducted by the late Christopher Keene. Argento has extracted a series of tangos (all his own tunes) from the opera, and collectively titled them Valentino Dances. No ballroom number better evokes the bold sensuality of the flamboyant 1920s than the tango. For Argento, the dance symbolizes the glamour of the film actor’s era.

For this orchestral suite, Argento has expanded and re-orchestrated several numbers from the Valentino opera. The first is associated with the subject’s work as a taxi dancer in New York; the second is identified with the woman he is destined to marry; and the last relates to the opera’s second act, when the film star, because of contractual litigation in Hollywood, is performing in theaters on the road. The composer, who admits that he himself has never indulged in the tango (nor, for that matter, any other dance), notes that this is his first piece to call for an accordion. Its reedy color plumbs a ready nostalgia for another time and place.

Instrumentation: 2 flutes, piccolo, 2 oboes, English horn, 2 clarinets (1 doubling bass clarinet), alto saxophone, 2 bassoons (1 doubling contrabassoon), 4 horns, 3 trumpets, 2 trombones, tuba, timpani, snare drum, bass drum, cymbals, suspended cymbal, bell tree, castanets, claves, maracas, tambourine, timbales, triangle, glockenspiel, accordion, harp, piano and strings

Edvard Grieg
Born: June 15, 1843,
Bergen, Norway
Died: September 4, 1907,
Bergen, Norway

Concerto in A minor for Piano and Orchestra, Opus 16
Premiered: April 3, 1869

In June 1867 Edvard Grieg, then a struggling 24-year-old composer, married his first cousin, Nina Hagerup, a soprano. The following summer, wishing for a break from the busy musical life of Norway, the Griegs went to Denmark, where they hoped the milder climate would benefit the composer’s often frail health. They rented a two-room garden cottage a few miles outside Copenhagen, and there Grieg began his Piano Concerto in A minor. He completed the score early the following year, and Edmund Neupert gave the first performance in Copenhagen on April 3, 1869. The concerto was an immediate success, but Grieg continued to revise it across the rest of his life: he made the final revisions in 1907, only a few months before his death.

allegro molto moderato. Grieg greatly admired the music of Robert Schumann, and the similarity between the beginnings of their respective piano concertos is striking: each opens with a great orchestral chord followed by a brilliant passage for the solo piano that eases gently into the movement’s main theme. Grieg makes his opening even more dramatic by beginning with a long timpani roll that flares up like a peal of thunder; the piano’s entrance then flashes downward like a streak of lightning.

The movement’s march-like main theme, shared on its first appearance by winds and strings, is only the first of many attractive ideas. (One observer has counted seven different themes in this movement, and these range from a melting lyricism to heaven-storming violence.) The cadenza that Liszt sight-read so well is particularly effective. Though it begins quietly, the concerto soon unleashes great torrents of sound from hammered octaves and brilliant runs. It is altogether typical of this movement that Grieg should introduce a new theme after the cadenza. The piano’s pounding, driving chords propel the music to its exciting close.

The mood changes completely in the Adagio. Grieg mutes the strings here and moves to the key of D-flat major, which feels soft and warm after the powerful opening movement. A long orchestral introduction leads to the entrance of the piano, which sounds utterly fresh after the dark, muted strings. But this entrance is deceiving. The piano part soon turns dramatic and drives to its own climax; the music subsides and continues without a break into the finale.

allegro moderato molto e marcato. After an opening flourish, the piano introduces the main theme, a dancing 2/4 idea that sounds as if its roots must be in Norwegian folk music. Once again, this movement is built on a wealth of ideas. At the coda Grieg moves into A major and ingeniously recasts his main theme in a 3/4 meter, and the movement drives to its powerful close.

Instrumentation: solo piano with orchestra comprising 2 flutes (1 doubling piccolo), 2 oboes, 2 clarinets, 2 bassoons, 4 horns, 2 trumpets, 3 trombones, timpani and strings

Liszt’s judgment was sound: the Grieg Piano Concerto has become one of the most popular ever written. Its combination of good tunes alternating with stormy, dramatic gestures, all stitched together with brilliant writing for piano, has made it virtually irresistible to audiences. In a way, this music has become a victim of its own success: by the middle of the last century it had become almost too popular, and over the last generation or so it has virtually disappeared from the concert hall. Which makes a fresh performance all the more welcome.

Program note by Eric Bromberger.
The slow introduction to the final movement is enlivened by the strings’ interjections of the three-note pattern. Gradually these anneal into the Allegro vivace, and off the movement goes, full of rhythmic energy and the sound of ringing bells. A central episode in the tempo of the introduction sings darkly; after wonderful sounds including eerie string glissandos, the Allegro vivace returns to rush the Symphonic Dances to a close guaranteed to rip the top off a concert hall.

Instrumentation: 2 flutes, piccolo, 2 oboes, English horn, 2 clarinets, bass clarinet, alto saxophone, 2 bassoons, contrabassoon, 4 horns, 3 trumpets, 3 trombones, tuba, timpani, snare drum, bass drum, cymbals, suspended cymbal, tambourine, tamtam, triangle, glockenspiel, chimes, xylophone, harp, piano and strings

Sergei Rachmaninoff
Born: April 1, 1873, Semyonovo, Russia
Died: March 28, 1943, Beverly Hills, California

Symphonic Dances, Opus 45
Premiered: January 3, 1941

In the summer of 1940 Rachmaninoff set to work on what would be his final complete work, a set of dances for orchestra that would ultimately be known as his Symphonic Dances, premiered by Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra on January 3, 1941.

Opulent, sumptuous—and subtle
This score is remarkable for the opulence of its color, and Rachmaninoff seems intent on finding and exploiting new orchestral sonorities. More remarkable still is Rachmaninoff’s subtle compositional method. He evolves this music from rhythmic fragments, bits of theme, simple patterns—which are then built up into powerful movements that almost overflow with rhythmic energy.

Non allegro. The music opens with some of these fragments, just bits of sound from the first violins, and over them the English horn sounds the three-note pattern that will permeate this work, reappearing across its span in endless forms. Rachmaninoff plays it up into a great climax, which subsides as the opening fragments lead to the central episode, sung at first entirely by woodwinds. This slow interlude—the reedy sound of the alto saxophone is exactly right for this wistful music—makes its way back to the big gestures of the beginning section, now energized by explosive timpani salvos. In the closing moments, Rachmaninoff rounds matters off with a grand choral for strings, beautifully accompanied by the glistening sound of bells, piano, harp, piccolo and flutes, and the movement winks into silence on the fragments with which it began.

Andante con moto (tempo di valse). The opening of the second movement takes us into a completely different sound-world with the icy tones of trumpets and horns, played forte but stopped. Rachmaninoff calls for a waltz tempo, but he sets the music in the untraditional meters of 6/8 and 9/8 and has the waltz introduced by the unlikely sound of solo English horn. This music evolves through several episodes, some soaring, some powerful, before subsiding in a sudden, almost breathless close.
